

I recieved an e-mail from XMm radio explaining that the NAB is trying to prevent XM from providing local weather and traffic information. Can this be legal? First of all, since XM isn't using hte public airwaves, what right does anyone have to sensor them? Second, it was my understanding that you can say anything you want on the radio except for the "dirty words" banned by the FCC and celebrated by George Carlin.

I pay for XM radio becuase I think FM radio has become too commerical and bland in the wake of the age of consolidation. I can't believe that anyone except the programming staff at XM should have the right to dictate the channels' programming.

Kelly Hopf
Minneapolis, MN